LADIES' AID

The Ladies' Aid met last Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. George Towne on South Narbonne avenue. Arrangements had been made to entertain in the summer house, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion, but the rain spoiled the plans, so everything was moved into the house and everyone had a most delightful time. The afternoon passed very quickly with games and other entertainments. Over fifty ladies were present and were served with delicious refreshments—chicken patties, fruit cake and chocolate—by the hostesses, Mrs. Ellenberger, Mrs. H. V. Adams and Mrs. Towne.

ALL BELOVED BY GRATEFUL NATION

Tributes of Memorial Day Shared By Each Defender of the Country

The year 1918 brought the significance of Memorial Day directly home to the present generation. The heroism of the sacrifices of 1863 had not been forgotten, but to the great majority of Americans it was merely a tale, not an experience. After 1918 there were few Americans who had not suffered personal loss or bereavement. The real meaning of "dying for one's country" was impressed on the consciousness of the people. The succeeding Memorial Days have found the nation honoring the memory of the young men who gave their lives in France and Flanders and revering, with new sincerity, the men who, more than half a century ago, died that America might live.

Two outstanding facts of the World War are universally conceded. America's participation and America's sacrifice were small in comparison with the labor and sacrifice of the nations which fought through all the bloody years of the struggle. Yet, during the brief period of American participation America fought as hard as any other belligerent nation, bore her full share of responsibility and burdens, and thus, coming to the front when the other nations were weary, actually won the war. It is generally believed that but for the American army the German offensives of March-June, 1918, would have carried Prussianism to victory.

America, therefore, without boasting, and with full realization that her sacrifice was small in comparison with the sacrifices of France and England and Belgium and Serbia and Roumania, and even of Russia, can cherish the gratification of having actually won the war by intervention at the most critical moment. Belgium's immortal heroism saved civilization in 1914; American altruism and devotion saved democracy in 1918.

But the story was not begun at Chateau-Thierry. It was not even begun more than a year before, when the United States, driven beyond the extreme limit of patience, formally declared the existence of a state of war. It was begun more than fifty years before, when the young manhood of the North marched forth at Lincoln's call. What was done in 1861-65 made possible the culmination of 1918. It is, really, all a part of the same glorious story. Without Chickamauga there would have been no Cantigny; the campaign in the Wilderness was paving the way for the Argonne.

All over the United States the graves of true American men, graves new and still unclaimed by nature, and graves of long ago, leveled, perhaps, by time's mercy and strewn with flowers by nature's own hand, are honored today by those whose lives have been made livable by the nobility of those who have died. They gave their all, and today we give our very little. Life was as precious to them as it is to us; nothing that we can give can be even a weak beginning of their stupendous gift. Nor do they demand great recompense; gratitude and homage, and a moment's pause in the mad whirl of life to bestow a thought and a flower on the graves of those whose lives were the price of our happiness.

In France, too, and on the dike-cut fields of Flanders, our heroes rest. Fear not that these boys of ours who are so far from us today will be neglected or forgotten. France, saved from utter destruction, is still dumbly grateful for the miracle, and generation after generation will weep at the graves of the men who came from afar and stayed in France forever. There, where they made their high sacrifice, they are surely at peace, and not even the sorrow of the loved ones over there whose gratitude, though impersonal, is greater than we who had no glimpse of war's horrible presence can comprehend.

In America there is one Memorial Day for the boys in blue and gray and the boys in khaki, and there is common reverence for those who began and those who completed the work of freedom. But the day has come to have more than an American significance. Far beyond the Atlantic it means as much as it means right here at home, and it has become, far more truly than our nation's birthday, an observation of world-wide gratitude to the strong-sinewed and strong-hearted republic of the gleaming west.

Mr. Baggs, to his stenographer—
"Miss Smythe, I understand you are engaged to my son. I think you might have seen me first!"
